An Unexpected Outcome.

THE Earl of Dartmouth, during a recent visit to Dartmouth college, sald, apropos of dueling:

Why it is I know not, but in Europe no duelist is so feared as the American duelist. No duel is considered so deadly, so hopelessly deadly, as the

"The Parislans and the Germans speak with shudders over their liquor of American duels wherein combatants are locked into a room, their left hands tied togother, and huge pistols in their right hands. They think that in the Western States duels of this nature are fought daily. "Well, I am going to tell you about a Parisian and the use that he made of the American duel. Being challenged, after a certain quarrel, it was his right to decide on the manner the combat, and he said:

"This shall be an American duel. The other principal and I will draw lots, and he to whom the lot falls will retire to a secluded place and, within earshot of the seconds, shoot himself.

"This horrible arrangement was agreed to, and on a still morning the combatants and their seconds met in the forest of Fontainebleau. Lots were drawn with a good deal of paller and nervous trembling, and luck went against the man who had proposed the American duel.

"He took his revolver, bade farewell to his seconds, shook his opponent by the hand, and retired behind a clump of stunted oak trees. There was a moment of suspense, of slience, then the report of a revolver, and the waiting men ran round the clump of oaks with horror-stricken faces.

"There the duelist stood, erect, un-round the clump of oaks with horror-stricken faces.

"There the duelist stood, erect, un-hurt. His pistol still smoked in his hand. He smiled regretfully.

"Geod gracious, gentlemen, is it not unfortunate" he said. I have missed myself."

Promptitude.

Promptitude.

Clement W. Andrews of Chicago, during the convention of the American Library association of St Louis visited a number of St. Louis factories.

In one of these inspections noon struck in the cardroom of a certain mill, and all the cardroom boys put by their work and disappeared as if by magic.

"Do all the boys," said Mr. Andrews, smiling, "drop their tools the instant the whistle blows!"

"Oh, no, not all of them," said the cardroom boss. "The more orderly ones have their tools put away before that time."

A Dangerous Affection.

Prof. Van Dyle of Princeton said in a scent address to a New York Sundayschool:
"Errors of logic, inconsequent reasoning, are common to the young.
"A little Princeton boy the other day was walking with his mamma. As he passed the house of a friend, he saw a dog passed the house of a friend, he saw a dog playing on the lawn.

"That dog is called Troy. Troy likes me, mamma, he said.

"How do you know Troy likes you, Charles" the mother asked.

"Because, one day, he tasted of me,' said the boy."

A Cruel Joke. The late Charles Parsons, the millionaire railroad man of New York, was noted for his kind heart and for his dislike of practical jokes. He one day said:
"I have loathed practical joking evorsince my residence in New Orleans, some fifteen verys age.

since my residence in New Orleans, some lifteen years ago. "I knew in New Orleans a young man of sensitive nature, who happened to be deaf. He hated his deafness. He tried to make believe that, really, he was not deaf at all. And this conduct, which was excusable enough, drew down upon him an amount of ridicule that was pitiable. "I shall never forget the poor young man's look of pain on a day when he was the unconscious victim of a practical loker.

"The joker, walking with me, spied the deaf youth on the other side of the street, said, 'Now for some fun,' and before I could intervene, catching the other's eye, he opened his mouth wide and worked it

A Till Tapper.

During luncheon the subject of widows ose, and on this interesting topic many riginal ideas were expressed. Mr. Leiter aid:

"Some widows are to be pitted. Others, again, are to be felicitated. My father used to describe a widow of the latter fort. sort

"She lived in Maryland; she kept a little village store. Her husband was a worthless fellow. He never worked, and he drank a great deal. A worthless fellow. I reteat, but nevertheless, when he died suddenly, many persons made calls of sympathy and condelence on the widow.
"My father did not call, but one day,
stopping at the store to buy some trifle or other, he thought it was no more than right to say in a feeling tone:
"You must miss your husband a great len! madam."

Well, sir, said the widow, 'it does seem strange to come into the shop and lind something in the till."

Misunderstood. During the inauguration of Flavel 8. Luther, the new president of Trinity col-ege, a student said:

Luther, the new president of Trinity college, a student said:

"I want to tell you about a mishap that befell Dr. Luther one morning last month. "He boarded one of our Hartford street cars, rode a mile or so with his eyes fixed on his new-spaper, and, close on the end of his journey, looked up and spied one of his students crumpled in a corner.

"The student was in a wretched plight, His clothing was stathed, his linen solled, his hair unbrushed. His face was pailed, and his eyes were bloodshot and dull. He looked ill; he looked as wreck; and it was easy to see what the trouble was.

"Dr. Luther, fresh and vigorous from his bath and his good breakfast, rose to get off. As he pased the unclean student he said grimly.

"Been on a drunk."

"The student's sleepy, eyes rolled languidly towards Dr. Luther, and in a dull and listless voice the young man said."

"So have I."

A Long Swear-Off

A Long Swear-Off

Russell Sage thinks that smoking is a bad habit.

"I overheard one day," he said recently, "a conversation that delighted me. It was a conversation between a young man and his wife. He appeared to be a rather extravargant and lazy fellow. She appeared to be economical, industrious and ambitious.

"The wife was trying to urged the husband to give up smoking. She was pointing out to him how much, in the course of a year, he spent on tobacco. She was showing him that mentally, physically and fluancially he would be better off without his pipe.

"But all great men have smoked," he grumbled.

"Well, she answered, "If you'll give up smoking till you're great, I'll be quite set-isfied."

love their home. They are an odd people, a people gifted with the power of saying amusing, memorable things.

"An old Peebles sheep-raiser once got together a little money, and made a journey to Paris. Paris, he had heard, was the most joyous, the most beautiful city in the world. Therefore he would see it before he died.

"On his return, a month or so later, his friends gathered round him. friends gathered round him.
"Tell us," they said, what Paris is like.
Tell us how it compares with the Scottish cities you have seen." They

A Rusian Proverb. "The late Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, the designer of the great 'Liberty En-lightening the World' in New York har-bor, was a tacitum man," said a New York sculptor. "He said little, but his brief, infrequent speeches were usually to the noint.

brief, infrequent species were as the point.

'Once, in Paris, I escorted a group of women to Earthold's studio. They were rather silly women. They asked a great many absurd questions, and they said a great many absurd things.

'One of them, for some reason or other, got to talking about women in public life, lecturing, voting, and so on. She asked Barthold what he thought of the woman question.

question. "The sculptor looked at me and winked slightly. Then he said; "'Madam, there is a Russian proverb appropriate to the woman question, and I recommend this proverb to your consideration. It is: If you be a cock, crow; it a hen, lay eggs."

Jealous of Providence. Before Frederick B Smith, the sccre-tary of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian association, set out on his ovangelistic tour of the world, he was entertained at dinner by a num-ber of his admirers. At the end of the dinner Mr. Smith made an address, choosing for his subject "Modesty." Among other things he said: "Some men are vain and conceited be-yond belief. I know a man who went walking with his wife once on the bank of a stream. He was a cardless, awkward, cose-jointed man, and suddenly, his foot slipping, he fell overboard. slipping, he fell overboard.

Though the water was deep and cold, the man got out after a few minutes struggling and granting, and his wife, as she hurrled him homewards said:

"George, you ought to be thankful to Providence that your life was sayed?"

"Yes, yes, George answered. "Providence of course, was very kind, but I was very clever, too."

Russell Sage thinks that smoking is a ball habit.

"I overheard one day," he said recently, "a conversation that delighted me. It was a conversation between a young man and his wife. He appeared to be a rather extravargant and lazy fellow. She appeared to be economical, industrious and ambitious.

"The wife was trying to urged the bushand to give up smoking. She was pointing out to him how much, in the course of a year, he spent on tobacco. She was showing him that mentally, physically and financially he would be better off without his pipe.

"But all great men have smoked," he grumbled.

"Well, she answered, "If you'll give up smoking till you're great, I'll be quite istissed."

A Home Lover.

Andrew Carnegie, at a recent dinner in New York, talked about Peebles.

"Peebles," said Mr. Carnegie, "would strike the stranger ma a bleak place. Despite its waulk mills, despite its black cattle, and its black-faced sheep, despite its waulk mills, despite its handsome iron bridge across the Tweed, Peebles is not a parish to strike the visitor as gay or lively.

"New York was talking about the water supplies of the world's great cities. A foreign city was mentioned that, after a good deal of expensive investigation, nad decided not to improve its notoriously impure water service, and the commissioner service, and the case was arceted and transfer and the city of the lawyer for the defense he would not vigorous approval. A little later the passionate periods of the lawyer for the prosecution would cause him to murmur low phrases of assent and encouragement.

"Then the magistrate,

A Matrimonial Mistake. Henry Schaefer, one of the champions of the North American Skat association, lives in Milwaukee, and at a Milwaukee wedding breakfast he said, apropos of rice, the other day.

"The bridegroom is fond of rice. At least, I hope he is fond of rice. Otherwise he will be displeased, tonight, tomorrow, next week, next month, when rice comes falling out of his umbrella, his hat, his slippers, his gloves. Some husbands, a year after their marriage, still find rice in unexpected places.

"It is man refuned the proferred rice with a gesture of discust, muttering.

"No, indeed Oh, no, indeed"

"You don't seem to like rice very much, said the hostese.

"No,' the man replied. 'It is associated with one of the most distressing mistakes.
I was ever guilty of.'"

A Difficult Position. The Rev. M. A. G. Himalaya, whose sun machine has been one of the features of the St. Louis fair, was talking the other day about the troubles of the St. Louis aeronauts.

"My friend," he said of one of the aeronauts, "was placed, as it were, on the horns of a dilemma, for on one side was the peculiar construction of his balloon, and on the other side were the peculiar rules of the committee.

"My friend's plight resembled," said Father Himalaya, "the plight of a certain clergyman in Lisbon This clergyman, in the middle of a sermon, suddenly paused, He looked about him thougatfully. Then, he said in a strange voice: He looked about him thougatfully. Then, he said in a strange voice:

"Now, my beloved brethren, I find myself in a position of some difficulty, for if I speak too low those at the farther end of the church will be unable to hear me, and if too loud, I shall awake our henorable fellow-townsman, Don Alfonso Gonzales."

The Rev. Heber Newton was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, and a Pennsylvania man said of him the other

"Newton, I remember, came back one October day from a walking trip in high size. He had a story to tell us, a story that appealed to him.

"It seems that, on his walk, he had put up the second night at a farmhouse. The farmer appeared to be a rather gay dog. He talked about beer, cards, cock fights—subjects that Newton disliked. Finally, after supper, as he finished his pipe by the kitchen stove, the man said to his wife.

wife: "Mary, I am goin' down to the tavern, if I ain't back by 10 o'clock, don't wait for me.' "No, I wen't. If you ain't home at 10 o'clock, I'll come for you, retorted the wife, compressing her lips in a grim

She Turned Vegetarian.

The Counters of Essex, who has many American friends, recently became a vegetarian. The other day, in a letter to New York, she accounted for her abandoument of flesh.

"By chance," she wrote, "I happened to see the preparations in a slaughter-heuse for the killing of a great herd of sheep.

"I can't teil you how unpleasant these preparations were—how everything was stained deep with blood—how there arose from the drenched, dark floors the peculiar odor of blood.

"As I was hurrying away, three beautiful lambs were led in by a man with a long, shining knife. Filled with pity and indignation, I said:

"How can you be so cruel as to put these innocent little lambs to death?"

"Why maden," said the man, 'you wouldn't eat them alive, would you?"
